A DOZEN OF FAIRLY SUCCESSFUL TEACHER PRACTICES

by:
Haren Bronia Valencia
Teacher III, Hermosa National High School

I just admire teachers who have a passion for teaching. A teacher who needs others to be an inspiration. The teacher is always happy with his/her work. The teacher that every school kid would love to have. For the rest of their lives, the teacher children recall.

Loves Teaching. Teaching is intended to be a very enjoyable and fulfilling career environment, though often challenging and exhausting. You can only become a teacher if you love children with your heart and expect to care for them. When you are not having fun with them, you can't expect the kids to have fun! It is counterproductive if you just read the notes from a textbook. Alternatively, enliven the lessons by making them social and engaging as possible. Let your teaching passion shine out through every day. Enjoy every moment of your teaching to the fullest.

Does make a difference. There is a saying, "With great power, comes great responsibility." As a teacher, you need to be mindful of the great responsibility that comes with your career and notes that. One of the goals will be: Make a difference in their lives. Why? How? When they're in your classroom, make them feel different, comfortable, and happy. Be the positive impact they have on their lives. Why? Upon entering your classroom on a specific day, you never knew what your students were going through or what situations they're going to get home to after class. And, just in case they don't get enough support from parents, you'll at least make a difference and provide them with that.

Spreads Optimism. Every single day put constructive energy into the classroom. You have a beautiful smile and don't forget to flash it every day as much as possible. I know that in your personal life you are fighting battles of your own, but once you reach the classroom, you can leave everything behind before you walk in the door. Your students deserve better than just taking out your anger at them. No matter how you feel, how much sleep you have had, or how frustrated you are, never let that show you up. Also if you're having a rough day, learn to put the students on a mask and make them think of you as a superhero. Be someone that’s always hopeful, cheerful, smiling. Remember always that positive energies are contagious and it is up to you to spread them. Don't let the disappointment of others take you down with them.

Gets Personal. This is the fun part of being an effective teacher, and important! Get to know your students and their priorities and find ways to communicate. And don't forget to tell them about yours too! It is also important to get to know their styles of learning so that you can cater to each as an individual. Therefore, attempt to get to know their parents too. It should not be treated as a duty to talk to the mother, but instead a privilege. Let it clear at the beginning of the school year that they can come to you at any time of the year, for anything. Do seek to get to know your colleagues even on a personal level. When you can find a good support network within and outside of school, you'll be much happier.

Gives 100%. If you give a lecture, write report cards, or give a colleague help-offer 100%. Do your work because you love teaching and not because you feel obligated to do it. Use so for self-expansion. Use it for helping others. Use it because the students get the most out of what you teach them. Give yourself 100 percent, teachers, friends, school, and everyone who believes in you. Never give up doing your hardest-this is all you can do.

Stays Organized. Never fall back on the labeling or recording of research for the students. Try to get your best on top and not let the pile rise past your shoulders! In the long run, that will save you a lot of time. You do need to keep an orderly calendar and prepare accordingly! The likelihood that last-minute lesson plans are successful is slim. Ultimately, keep a newspaper handy and point your thoughts down as soon as an inspiring idea arises in your mind. Then make a strategy for putting certain ideas into effect.

Always Open-Minded. As a teacher, there will be occasions when you will be formally or informally examined that's also why you should always give 100 percent. Your manager, teachers, parents, and even kids are continuously judging and criticizing you. Rather than getting angry when someone has to say something about your teaching, be open-minded when you receive constructive feedback and shape an action plan. Prove that you are the instructor you want to be successful at. No one is flawless and there is always space to be changed. Others sometimes see what you just don't see.

Sets Standards. Creates expectations for and for the pupils. From the start make sure they know what is acceptable as opposed to what is not. Remind the students, for example, how you would like to complete research. Are you the teacher who wants your students to do their hardest to get their hands on their hardest and most neat job? And are you the lessor who couldn't care less? Just note, if you give a lot you can only expect a lot. As it says, "Practice what you are teaching"

Finds Inspiration. An influential teacher is an innovative one, but that doesn't mean you need to build something from scratch! Look for inspiration from any potential source. Whether it comes from books, education, Pinterest, YouTube, Facebook, blogs, or what have you, keep finding it!

Holds Change. Things aren't always going according to plan in life. If it comes to teaching this is especially true. Be versatile and go with the flow when there is a transition. Once a new principal arrives a successful teacher should not worry about changes. Compared to their present situations, they do not feel the need to note how successful they had at their last school or with their last group of learners. Instead of stressing change, embrace it with both hands and show you're able to hit every curveball that's coming your way!
Creates Reflection. A successful teacher is focusing on how they teach to develop as a teacher. Think about what went well this time, and what you'd do differently. You must note that, from time to time, we all have "failed" lessons. Instead of seeing it as a loss, think of it as a lesson, and learn from it. As teachers, you're continuing your schooling and learning. To improve your teaching skills there's always something to learn and think about. Keep talking about your job and educate yourself on what you consider to be your "weaknesses" because we all have them! The most critical thing is being able to remember them and work on them to develop their teaching skills.

Resiliency Rocks. Teaching children is one of the most fulfilling and best career choices one can make. Each morning, you wake up, you have a bunch of eager faces ready to greet you in a classroom that you can make your own. This is one of the most complex, thrilling, and versatile jobs around and it's just that the instructor has the flexibility to do. The need for repeated tasks and obligations! Only a chance to encourage, interact, and communicate with learners every day, with an array of talents, visions, and ideas that they hang out to explore.

There are, however, a variety of other behaviors that make a successful teacher, but these are the ones I find most relevant. Other character characteristics can also be related to these. In any case, there is still something good to find but it is up to you to find it. Keep your head up, and happily teach for the love of reading! Originally this piece was presented by a reader in our community forums. We've retained it because of public curiosity. The views expressed here are proper to the writer.

References:

https://www.edutopia.org/

https://www.pointtopointeducation.com/