School is a cavalry lead by brave knights who devotes their lives to train soldiers to secure the future of our kingdom. Those brave knights are commonly known as teachers, they are the ones honing the sword of the new generation to hold the key to a brighter future for our beloved country. We consider school as our second home and teachers as our second parents, which is technically true if you are going to ponder about it. They feed us knowledge that we use in our everyday life, they teach us on how we could understand ourselves and guide us on choosing the journey we want to pursue. There are five quality that proves a teacher is a good leader.

They are committed to their students, a deep emotional connection are established between them. The deep connection enables them to have the ability to teach not through reading books and listening but their heart. That deep connection makes the student see the teacher not as a cruel dictator to be feared but a loving leader to be followed. A lot of professionals thinks that teaching is not a profession but instead a calling, teachers devotes all of their time to the students because they trust on their skills and ability they know and will eventually discover. Their passion drives them to have the determination to strive triumphantly despite of all the challenges they face. Just like leaders they always show strength even they are breaking apart because of personal matters, setting aside negative thoughts to teach children optimism.

Teachers should never entrap themselves in a box of standards, limiting their expectation to outcomes that can be counted with our fingers. A teacher is also an efficient leader if he/she has the collaboration with the students inside the class. They help the students discover their hidden talents and enhance the skills they already possess, never underestimating someone just because they can’t do it but instead cheering them up to try a different task. A teacher must also have the good communication skill because they are not only chatting with students, they are exchanging ideas with the future leaders in our society. Just like leaders, teachers are not only good with speaking all day, they are also good listeners who accepts opinions of others since they know they don’t know everything. They respect everyone’s opinion no matter what is their status in life because that doesn’t make someone wrong or right.

The world is continually changing as time goes by, nothing remains constant but change itself, and a good leader is coping up with it not forcing everyone to stay how they used to be just to attain the perfection they want to achieve. Teachers loves embracing changes because it enables them to learn more and know the latest techniques and ways of teaching. They will be able to perform roles they haven’t yet played and improve the ability they have before. Teachers are not the only ones who will benefit in these changes, students will also experience the luxury of having an upgraded way of teaching. Teachers and Leaders shares a lot of characteristics like not just thinking about their own good but also considering the welfare of the students who will gain the fruits of their efforts. Teachers see the success of their former students as their own achievements, they are one of the most important individuals in our society because they are leading the new generation on how they can be productive individuals in the future.
