How can we sure that our children make wise moral choices? Here are some tips that I can share with you on how to teach your children to make a wise moral choice.

• Make them feel good and worthy
  - Children who know they are special don’t need to find acceptance to other people. If children feel that their parents love and accept them regardless of what they are. Children that feel their skills and abilities are valued by their parents dare to face difficulties. They teach children to have faith in God is likely doing righteousness.

• Establish moral values at an earlier stage of the child
  - Teaching moral values at an earlier stage of child’s life more likely live in practice as they have grown up

• Encourage your children to do base their choices on principles
  - If your children have faith in God and live according to the moral values you taught then they won’t do any wrong with other people.

• Encourage your children to make their own decisions and take responsibility for it
  - Letting your child make your own decision and taking responsibility for it to make your child wise in making decisions. They are a more responsible person as they grow.
• Allow your kids to do things on their own with your guide.

- Controlling our children’s life make them miserable when they grow up they can’t decide for their self.

- Most children controlled by parents their life has no self-control, they more irresponsible to their act.

• Teach your kids to do things independently

- If parents always shelter a child’s problem or trouble things come easy for them they have no reason to develop traits of perseverance, courage, determination, thrift, and hardship.

- Let your child spread their wings to see the real world and face the challenges
