A purpose of reading is comprehension, getting meaning from a written text. A major goal of reading is to help pupils develop the knowledge, skills and experiences. They must have comprehension if they are to become competent and enthusiastic readers. Without comprehension, reading is frustrating.

Developing a reading habit will help you continuously think beyond immediate moments. You will be able to think of smart solutions to everyday problems because of the intelligence and creative side you gain from reading.

It has been proven that those who have a reading habit often show signs of advanced Intelligence levels. Books and other reading materials open your mind to use new words and embark upon a whole new world of word usage. Proper word usage is a very important part of being a human being. At a young age, we need to develop communication skills with concise word usage to get our point across. Reading helps master this skill. It only means that you can learn history and real-life events first hand if you have a reading habit. Not only that, but you can learn anything you want from reading a book. Reading every day can be challenging, but working to develop a reading habit within a child will truly help inspire them to dream big and succeed. It’s so worth it!
References: