If there is one quality that a teacher is well-known and well-identified that would be commitment. The teacher’s commitment may be shown in different ways. Let us cite the means on how may a teacher play significant and vital roles in proving that he or she is committed to the profession that he or she chose to have.

A teacher is committed to develop a lifelong learner. This connotes that the teacher is here to transform each student into a lifelong learner which is a kind of person who carries with him or her the knowledge and skills acquired during the times in school and someone who is always positive, enthusiastic and willing to learn.

A teacher is expected to be committed in adhering to the prescribed curriculum. Every teacher has to follow the core and contents of the curriculum for these impart the essential knowledge, skills and competencies needed in the education of every child or learner. This also means that the teacher should religiously follow what are instructed and stipulated in the curriculum and may also be creative if needed.

A teacher is committed in understanding the needs of individual learner. This means that the teacher has to assess and identify the academic and non-academic needs of every learner which will help him or her in development. A committed teacher compassionately assist the learner in every aspect of development.

A teacher is committed in addressing the learners’ diversity. It is a fact the all learners are different. A teacher who has a great commitment in the profession is patiently doing ways and activities to serve the diverse learners, addressing their needs and satisfying their passion to learn and to discover knowledge and skills.
A teacher is committed to contribute meaningfully to the profession. This shows that a teacher does meaningful things in the school, sharing his/her expertise, talents and unique abilities in order to help the school, inspire the schoolchildren and to be a role model to others.

A teacher is committed to relate to the community. The teacher extends his or her services and friendliness to the community. It is very important for a teacher to meet the stakeholders and be in harmony with them and be of help to them when needed.

Truly, the teacher’s commitment is evident in the school. The teacher does his/her best to educate the learners, to follow the curriculum, to understand learner’s individual needs, to address diversity in school, to contribute to the teaching profession, and to relate to the stakeholders in the community.
