Effort is a voluntary exertion of physical or mental energy, a normally earnest attempt or achievement while a force is something that changes the state of rest or the body in motion, to compel to do something or to act. These two words have different spelling and meaning but both have a connection in teaching.

The teacher as a carrier of learning must have the willingness to teach to overcome the problem that may arise as he performs his job. Different individuals have different personalities Teaching them requires not only varied strategies but also a lot of patience to understand their individual responses.

A teacher also play a vital role in determining and evaluating learning progress of the children. He has a great influence on how they will turn out in the future. As a result his work became harder because of its life-long effect.

In order to cope with these difficult tasks, always remember that you are a teacher not because of your salary but with your profession. No matter how hard it is do the best that you can to serve the school well. A little of sacrifice is of big help to the learners. Teach with a golden heart.

Another thing is as a teacher you should be guided with the policy of honesty. Do not escape from your classroom without completing the six hours of teaching and if possible spend more time with the children. Give more exercises or activities to enhance their abilities.
Assisting those who are in need and connecting with them always are something to hold on by the teacher because he is able to identify who among his learners are with problems. Knowing their interest, capturing their heart and mind and finding ways to be with them will help too.

Moreover, as a teacher you should be a good listener, respond immediately to any situation and evaluate your manner of teaching. Listen to the opinion of your pupils and be a part in the decision making. Make them feel that they are always important. It is not enough that you know how to teach but what happened after you teach.

According to Walker, a teacher must be well-prepared, pessimistic, creative, compassionate, have a sense of humor, respect students, forgiving and admit mistakes in order to become more effective in his chosen profession.

Indeed, teaching is an effort and a driving force to mold every learner to become a better and mature individual in the future.
