ART OF TEACHING

by:

Sylvia D. Gatus
Teacher III, Orani National High School

Teaching is not just a profession, it is considered as an art. This means that teaching shows beauty and does what is beautiful. It is just right to see the beauty or art of teaching. Teachers are considered as beautiful people and what they may manifest in the school may be considered the art of teaching.

Applying a teaching philosophy is the foremost thing to manifest an art for teaching. Having a genuine idea would give direction and color to one’s teaching strides.

Projecting of soul onto the students, subject and ways of doing things would create an art in teaching. This would certainly express the best in the vocation for the sincerity in performing the job is evident.

Delivering the lessons using different strategies is also a part of employing art and aesthetic in teaching. The usage of different pedagogues would redefine teaching in so many ways.

Employing best classroom practices also helps in making art in this job. These best practices invigorates teaching and applies order in the delivery of instructions to the learners.

Mentoring relationships with the learners during the teaching-learning process is also yielding art in teaching. Through the mentoring stage the learners are able to perform or do better in school.
Creating a pleasant learning environment is also artful in a sense. Teaching in a conducive and pleasant classroom makes the daily interaction active and productive most especially on the part of the learners.

Inspiring the students to learn in the school may contribute in the attainment of art in teaching. Seeing students inspired and active in the class discussions is definitely pleasing.

Accepting challenges in the teaching field is also a good scenario. Adhering to these challenges is worth doing and produce art in teaching.

Art in teaching may be readily achieved by a teacher who puts his or her mind and heart in performing the tasks of a teacher.

References:
https://poorvucenter.yale.edu/ArtofTeaching