When we do lesson planning, giving an assignment or extension is one of its parts. But as times goes by, giving an assignment to students giving us headache. Making us difficult to handle because you can count on your fingers how many will do theirs. The question is, can we consider an assignment as a burden student’s family and leisure time?

The advancement of technology and a modern world significantly affect the student’s perspective of learning. The use of internet had a vast extension of new information that can be very useful as a tool and learning resources. But it can also be a sort of interference to the learning of students. The easy access on different computer and mobile games hindrance their focus on studying. They tend to spend most of their time staring and clicking on their gadgets. So, to most students they would think that doing their assignment is not part of their responsibility anymore and it is just a waste of time.

Having an assignment cannot be considered as negative or hindrance to the time spend of the learners to their family of other similar matter. Doing an assignment, help them to continue and improve what skills they had learned in school because not all students can easily cope up with the lesson specifically in math, English or Science subject. So, they needed more practice for them to boost their skills and retain their knowledge. Also, doing an assignment can be a sort of family time because you didn’t know that already build a quality time with them. It is just a matter of encouragement and support they need. Teaching and helping your kid can boost their perseverance and to pursue what they are doing. Likewise, students may also develop strong self-esteem in doing their assignments and manage their spare time instead of playing computer games or strolling around. They can also learn to spend time and focus on the subject area they seem to be hard and struggling. They can also explore or express their own thoughts and ideas or even create more perspective in certain topic or issues. Also, they can evaluate their own progress by doing an assignment. They will help assess themselves on what to improve and enhance. Most of all, would come to realize that having an assignment is part of the education process making them more responsible and useful to the society.

Let us continue to encourage our students learn to accept the importance of having and doing their assignments, its for their own sake and fulfilling future.
