The term leadership can also refer to a variety of different things, depending on how you were exposed to various types of leaders in the past. There are a number of styles and leaders that you may be able to identify, and some of these are more effective than others. Whether you’re a current school leader or aspire to be one, you have a responsibility to learn how to lead in the 21st century.

According to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) (2013), “learning leadership” is fundamental to any organization, and it is about taking responsibility for the center’s continuous improvement. This concept is becoming more complex as we move into a 21st century world.

Effective school leaders are those who can provide support and guidance to school administrators. They should also be responsible for the school’s success (Morris, 1999). Likewise, personal qualities such as curiosity, persistence, flexibility, responsibility, and hard work are still very important for school leaders. They are always the key factors to success.

A positive mindset can change your life forever. It can motivate you to take risks, think outside the box, and make you feel confident. Developing a Growth Mindset is about recognizing that your thinking is not working for you and that it can lead to failure. You should also cultivate a positive mindset, as well as a global perspective. By focusing on the big picture, you can create a culture that values sustainability and wellbeing.
Key skills that a leader will need are teamwork, high EQ, and focused. A good focus is a fundamental skill for everyone in the information age. It involves being able to stop and focus on the moment, as well as keeping a broader perspective.

Leaders are good at cultivating constructive feedback and making a habit of reflecting on how they can improve things. They also know how to set boundaries and work with those around them. On the other hand, create a framework for yourself that supports your work. These habits will help you get the most out of your time and attention.

Developing the capacity to lead and motivate others is never limited to training individuals at the top. It should never be a one-off event or a series of workshops or events. It should help you develop strategies and tools that will help you drive change.

Whatever your school’s leadership framework, training can help make it a thought leader school. Establishing solid leadership is an ongoing process that can help you attract and retain the best global leaders.

References:

SCHOOL LEADERSHIP FOR THE 21ST CENTURY. Available at https://thinkstrategicforschools.com/leadership-in-schools/