The new generation of learners is very fortunate to have the K to 12 Program for it will transform them to be globally competitive. It is indeed true that the learning in the current curriculum enables the student to evolve from a simple student to being globally competitive.

To be globally competitive, a student needs to acquire extensive knowledge and competencies. It is very important to learn ample knowledge in your chosen field of study and to meet all the needed proficiencies.

The other way to be globally competitive is through learning and equipping oneself with practical skills. The acquisition of varied abilities related to the workplace is essential. The aptitudes that you learn in school most especially in the Senior High School are instrumental in obtaining a job here and abroad.

A globally competitive individual is never afraid to meet new challenges. The attitude of accepting challenges would be an advantage and would lead the person to be well-prepared in the real world. The chance of being very competitive is enriched through experiences.

Indulging in culmination is also one means to be globally competitive. In schools, the culmination activity showcases the performances of the students in different learning areas. The students display their skills which they learned from their teachers.
Senior High School is sending the students in work immersion. Through this kind of practicum the students experience actual jobs and they are being trained to be employees in different organizations.

There are times that the students are visiting commercial and industrial establishments in the nearby community as part of the school field trip. This is a good exposure for the students for they witness how the business establishments operate. This adds to their preparation to become globally competitive.

Teaching employability is a task that a teacher is bounded to do. Teachers should prepare the students for the future jobs. They should learn the traits and characteristics that employers look for employees. If the students know the requirements in employment then they may become globally competitive.

Students should also be engrossing in business or entrepreneurship. They should learn how to put up their own simple business for them to have a good start. Thus, this makes them globally competitive.

Being globally competitive is a great advantage most especially in the execution of work or job.
