The school is in full responsibility of educating each child holistically. The teacher being an important agent of change in the school is expected to address the needs of every child for development, growth and productivity.

The educational needs like quality instructions, educational devices, instructional materials, technology, interventions, guidance and counseling and assistance are being bestowed by the educators in the school. In a broader perspective, let us cite the benefits of attending to the needs of the children in the school.

The child would feel that he or she belongs in the group. The child may see his or her importance as part of the class if his or her needs are being given attention and emphasis. It is truly inspiring to witness that the teacher is concerned with the essential things that the child wishes to have for better learning.

Addressing the child’s needs would increase the child’s interest to learning. If the child is provided with essential needs, his or her interest would increase. This also stimulates the child to focus in every subject area for fruitful learning.

The child may also perform well in academic performance if the educational needs are being served. By means of offering the vital things for learning, then the child would do well thus better academic achievement is yielded.

Attending to the needs of every child is helpful in raising their confidence. Self-esteem is amplified and increased upon giving focus to the necessities in learning. The child would feel confident if the teacher provides him or her with the educational needs.
The child may feel happy in the school if he or she is not left behind. The child that is being given focus and attention is somewhat secured and would face the world with great positivity and big hope. The chance to develop and grow is present in this case.

It is certainly energy-boosting if the child feels the completeness within oneself. The passion to achieve excellence in raising one’s talent or ability is evident once the child has the vitality and perseverance because the needs are delivered completely.

Moreover, the child may feel and see the principles of equality and equity upon the provision of educational needs in the school. The children have equal chances to grow and to be assisted in reaching their goals and in achieving better educational outcomes.

Let us conscientiously address the needs of the learners because they are the future leaders of the society. As Herbert Hoover, the 31st President of the United States, significantly uttered, “Children are our most valuable resource.”
