When someone is asked of what they want to become when they grow up, the instant answer is to become somebody like a doctor, teacher, engineer or any professional that we could imagine. Why is this so? Does it mean that at the very young age, people really want to have a profession of their own or are they being motivated by the environment where they live or by the people whom they live with? According to some studies, people tend to dream on something big like to become somebody in the future because of the inner intention that they want to prove to themselves and to other people that they are capable of doing that thing so they strived harder to reach their goal. But as they get closer to achieving their dreams, they tend to be eaten by their ambitions and they forgot to bring with them the good personality and proper attitude/behaviour.

When we will look at it in general, we could realize that in our society today, not all professionals carry their professions. There are some who are supposed to be the vessel of good morals and proper conduct but failed to do so because the good attitude is not reflected on them. They tend to be rude and mean to others especially to those whom they thought are below their level. There are also professionals who are belittling other workers like the utilities, service crews, vendors, helpers and others who don’t have the white collar job. While some, even in the field of their profession failed to perform accordingly because of the bad habit that they had developed over the years like disobeying their superiors or talking as loud as they could as if they are quarrelling or bargaining something, even if they are so near with each other.
If these professionals will deepen their understanding on being professional, they will realize to reflect and figure things out in order to behave properly and act accordingly as they deliver their pledged profession because after all, beyond their profession, there is a person inside of them that they should cherish, treat well and treasure in order to be treated sensibly by others. It is not the profession that you have why others will choose you to be with them, it is still who you are and how you treat them that matters most. Choose to be humane because at the end of the day, we will leave our professions but we will bring with us the good traits and attitudes that we have built within us through the years and that truly counts.

References:

Beyond Your Profession: https://careertrend.com/displaying-professional-attitude-8820.html