We are now living in this world with the computer natives I mean our pupils in our recent environment is familiar with every single gadget and technologies, and it is a very big challenge for all teachers to easily adapt the modern ways of teaching so we can be able to understand our modern learners.

Facing the new generation now with the use of recent gadget and tools find it hard to most teachers, not familiar with the new apps, the terminologies and even how this innovation invades the mind and heart of the youth. Realizing the facts that how teachers would cope with the real situations, what techniques and strategies are suitable, and how they would be able to communicate with these ‘techie’ pupils.

Nowadays, we are handling the millennial students where in Millennials are most likely to have lack of professional boundaries influenced by socializations, a need to have immediate feedback, a sense of entitlement, lack of critical thinking skills, unrealistic expectations, high level of parental involvement, and an expected “how to” guide to succeed in and out of the classrooms.

Since millennial generation has arrive in our classrooms, millennial teachers are in need now, why? Teachers who-like their students-have grown up with technology, social media and the promise of work-life balance. If the same genre works together, the possibility about generation gap, misinterpretation of information will no longer a problem.

But as Millennial Teachers, we encountered things and situation that we need to strive and win for it. What are those? Let us all be familiar with these and find ways to overcome these challenges.

1. Work-life Balance. Most Millennial teachers find hard to weigh life between work. Sometimes they much prioritized work over their personal lives. They have the mind-set to appreciate less their personal lives and practiced more in the field of education.
2. Technology: It’s a No-Brainer. Millennials teachers are computer dependent. They have never lived without technology. When they assigned in remote areas where access in technology is limited, millennial teachers felt that they were stuck in the past.

3. Fear of being- Instagrammed. Social Media is a part of their life; however, unintended social media posts may jeopardize their career. Teachers play an important role in our society and we should serve as a model of values.

4. What about the future? Many millennial teachers worry about the future and the ability to stay in the education field. Millennial teachers are in need to continue advocate themselves as professionals.

Millennial teachers may face challenges today, but these professionals are the future of education. Despite of all the challenges, problems and conflicts we may encounter with our millennial students and even in our workplace, still we must bear in our minds that teachers play an important role in the learning process. Our students need us. We mould their future. We touch their lives and inspire them to be successful. Our worth is not just limited within the four corners of the classroom but its beyond of what we have known.

References:

https://www.wgu.edu/heyteach/article/biggest-challenges-millennial-teachers-face1811.html