When we talked about leadership, we think it is a tough job to do. Leadership is a continuous process of influencing others priming them to be an accomplice in the realization of a mutual goal. Leaders carry out this process by applying their leadership attributes such as character, knowledge, skill, beliefs, ethics, and values. Leadership skills are not earned within a day. It must be carefully cultivated. It is done through everyday life.

A good leader is a positive thinker. Always features a good smile to everybody. By doing this, he creates a good impression to others that if he can make it, why can’t they? Having faith with each other gives self-confidence and pleasure.

Good leaders have learned that even sometimes they doubt themselves, they must not show it. They will act as if they know where they are going. They must act as winners. They must be pleasant and their speech polished.

Be competent. We all know that knowledge is POWER. With this, people will look to you for guidance and direction. Be enthusiastic. By showing this trait people will lend their mental strengths and other possible contributions to the job. A good leader doesn't do all the works alone. Others must be involved to form a team and to create a harmonious relationship.

The leader does not say "Get going". Instead, he says "Let’s go and lead the way". He does not walk behind with a whip. He is out in front of the banner.
