COMING HOME

Summer is fast approaching and we can see people not only at the beach but also at the mall. Why? The answer is very simple. They need someplace cold enough to end the heat. With that, I can’t help but relate that to what teachers are going through. They always find some ways and place to end their agonies.

Nevertheless, in the process of consoling themselves, they suddenly find themselves torn between going back to their home base and staying to the citadel they found. However, what is a citadel? In the old time, it is considered to be a strong castle in or near a city, where people can shelter from danger, especially during a war. Thus, everyone, truly need citadel.

In this field, we tend to survive, but we cannot deny the truth that we also experience the point of catastrophe which leads us to feel hopeless. Our lives are almost totally spent in the four walls of our classrooms. Yet, we know very well that at the end of the day, we will still leave it when the right time comes. We shall all retire and leave everything behind. Hence, we sometimes feel like we have to be prepared for the many things to come. We won’t be breathing just for this job. There are still many things in store for us.

To sum, we may be here, but we do not have to live with and for it only to leave in the end. We do not have to feel secured only through the comfort found somewhere, but instead, we have to believe that no matter what the weather may be, we can stay. May it be a cold or hot weather, we are home.
