CREATING A WORLD OF PEACE THROUGH EDUCATION

by:
Janice Dela Cruz Mercader
Teacher-III Baseco Elementary School

“Don't tell me peace has broken out.”
Bertolt Brecht (1898 - 1956)

Peace education is one of the most alluring fields a student of the society may want to take. In its 50 years of existence since it becomes a University degree, the field has become so prevalent that many organizations and scholars made contributions to boost the academicity, institutionalization, and its formality as a field of study.

These are: 1. to understand armed conflict; 2. to develop ways to prevent and resolve wars and other related issues such as genocide, terrorism, human trafficking, and gross violations of human rights; and 3. Create a system to solve conflicts.

Some reasons were peace issues, political, religious, others were economic. Getting the answer where conflicts start must be solved to understand the situation. However, it needs diplomatic people to work as ambassadors between countries in conflict. These people do not just study negotiation, they literally studied peace concepts and how to work a problem out.

Creating a just system with a society is truly a laborious task – because in here, it is not hypothetical; people will work with people. In the field of education, the concept of peace is integrated but not emphasized especially on countries with radical ideologies.

There are groups who transfer their ideologies to children – the hate for the government and the indifference in religion. How do you think they transcended their ideological radicalism?
References:

https://study.com/academy/lesson/what-is-peace-education-objectives-importance.html