CREATING BALANCE IN OUR CHILD’S LIFE

by:
Mylene C. Obispo
Teacher II- Pagalanggang Elementary School

CREATE involvement with children apart from the problem of schooling. Ask children to make value judgments about the quality of their school performance rather than teachers and traditional ways like lecturing, moralizing, and pontificating. The Separate issue of college performance from other aspects of a child’s life.

Use positive reinforcement techniques to foster better school performance. Teachers can change their concept of assignments, making it non-compulsory. If homework is already issued, it should be meaningful, reasonably long, and reflect the high standards.

Maintaining a child’s social activities is significant this might include hobbies, sports, club activities, family, and social time. Schools need to re-think the way during which they educate students. Civility, moral education, volunteer service, effective education, and cooperating learning need to be stressed in conjunction with the 3R’s. Parents need to encourage their children to involve themselves during a good selection of activities. Such stress will develop the “whole child” and make children more hospitable to the responsibilities of schooling.

References:

http://www.familyresource.com/parenting/character-development/creating-balance-in-a-childs-life#text=Create%20sense%20of%20involvement,aspects%20of%20child's%20life