DAILY LESSON LOG OR DAILY LESSON PLAN?

by:
Jane L. Mason
Master Teacher I, Limay Elementary School

DLL (DAILY LESSON LOG) OR DLP (DAILY LESSON PLAN)? Which one would you prepare? As we confronted the issues nowadays about K to 12, teachers have the same query on which guide should be followed?

How do we compare? DLP or DLL? Let us have a closer look. DLP by its meaning is a teacher’s detailed description of the course of instruction that follows the following outline: Objectives, Subject Matter, Procedure, Assessment, and Assignment.

Teachers may make modification of the TGs/ TMs if needed to suit the learner’s ability provided that the learning standards and competencies are met. Teachers are encouraged to enhance the TGs to provide activities that will develop (HOTS) higher thinking skills.

As directive in the guidelines of Dep.Ed. Order No. 70, s. 2012, teachers with less than 2 years in teaching experience shall be required to prepare DLP and teachers with more for than 2 years may adopt the Daily Lesson Log which contain the following entries: Lesson as cited in TGs/TMs reference material with page number, Learners’ Material used: Activity Sheets, Modules, and other materials with the page number reference, Remarks indicating the number of learners within mastery level, number of learners needing enrichment / refinement lessons, and Other Activities include the interventions given to the learners who did not master the lesson(s) in the previous day.

Now, it is time for you to decide. Which is your CHOICE?
References: