The English language can be considered as an instrument of change in the world. The human race has witnessed its evolution since the alphabet was universally accepted by man. It is alive and it has been in the path of growth where new words keep adding up to the lexicon with the passing of time.

People are better if they are able to speak in English. Not necessarily with fluency and finesse, for as long as communication come into terms of understanding and agreement. Professionally, it is a must to have it as effective means to be able to settle deals and business negotiations.

When it comes to English literature the great volume of work is a testimony which forms part of the culture of many generations. Reading and speaking can be no less exhilarating. English literature is multi-dimensional, it provides readers to experience the different facets of life, mood swings, indescribable thrills and expectations. Submerging oneself into it is an added experience.

According to Drucker (2014), literature encompasses almost everything we read, see, and hear. It is a collection of oral and written works of a society that depicts people’s beliefs, values, mores and aspirations as well as the struggles therein. It is categorized into two major types, prose and poetry.

Prose is a literary work where thoughts are written in the form of sentences and paragraphs. Along this line are novels, essays, short stories, fairy tales, epics, fables, myths, and the like which until now are influencing the lives of many. The remarkable creativity in the work of great minds is further classified into fiction which is a product of imagination and non-fiction which is based on factual information.

On the other hand, poetry is distinguished by its form consisting of lines and stanzas. Its three-dimensional presentation consists of the narrative, dramatic and lyrical poems.

Learners and readers are most welcome to get into it, for the worth of study and past time. The world of English Literature is where quality pleasure is, in the fullness of meaningful experience and discoveries.
