DOING THINGS DIFFERENTLY

Is it bad to be ordinary? Is it just fine to have things that are not so special? Should we live and do actions in ordinary ways? The answers to these questions may vary from people’s perspectives. Certainly, no exact answer can be gained in raising this question.

Come to think of it, some may say that there is nothing wrong with someone being ordinary. Living a life simply is no big deal too. However, what does ordinary really mean? Ordinary is acting and behaving just like most people. Your actions have no difference to theirs as well. Therefore, it seemingly falls down to the idea of simplicity and contentment.

On the other hand, some people choose not to be ordinary. They prefer to be unique and desire to stand out. They would like to be remembered for their extraordinary ways. Evidently, it is the nature of people to want more than what others have; to reach the summit of any mountain climbed; and to touch the sky the farthest they can.

Personally, aspiring to be “someone” by doing things differently may not be considered as a negative trait. Anyway, teachers are expected to make a difference. Thus, being different could also be a good start. But then, one must remember that the purpose of being extraordinary should be for the welfare of many. It should serve as a guide and reflection. If the cause of someone’s will to be not ordinary is for the sake of others and not solely of his own, I must say it is the best decision one has ever made.

I have personally witnessed and saw educators who chose not only to be just a teacher. They perform and serve beyond the definition of this title. Indeed, educators are unique in their own ways. Moreover, these people who really make a difference are those who took the road with eyes wide open. They seek for their waterloo and later turn them to victories.

Hence, choosing to be unique and to aim something beyond what eyes can see is just an ordinary scene in the day to day life of a teacher for they extend and offer great sacrifice for the betterment of many.
