EDUCATION: A FLOWER IN BLOOM

“Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world.”
-Nelson Mandela

by:
ARCHIE B. ALARCON
Teacher III, Sto. Domingo Elementary School

It is like a flower- delicate, pure, and full of beauty which ultimately needs nourishment to be able to sprout and mature. Much like us when we were younger, we felt like we could fly with the bees and birds and the butterflies or dance along with the wind. It was as if we were invincible where we learn that: it is of great importance to be able to grasp the essence of being educated.

Just like a flower at the peak of its growth it is filled with excitement – for we can categorize each different forms of letters and words into one specific sound created – our voice. Isn’t it exciting to hear our own self verbally communicating, reciting, and explaining? How it forms into a single phenomenon where we are all able to comprehend the elusive concepts of the day to day changes in our surroundings or how each systematic processes are designed in the mechanical, technical, and scientific knowledge developed in life.

A flower is also filled with curiosity when it has opened up each petal to see the world it is now a part of – where being educated lets us wonder and therefore question the rare occurrence of events in a definite time and space. It is where we have limitless imagination, where education emerged that can move mountains. New technologies are invented to be of help to humanity, to provide ease and comfort for us, to assess and adjust to our needs and wants and to adapt to the ever evolving environment of this planet.

Also like a flower in the nearness to its death it is filled with anxieties – with this, it can make or break an individual for it can be a tool to perform well for further development which always encompasses the advantages for the greater good. At the same time, it can also be a tool to bring destruction to ourselves and to others, to commit danger and to consciously pronounce evil to the entirety of the population.
Truly, a flower will never be itself without the aid of its environment and all of us who are beneficially educated should keep in mind that the extravagance of life would not be possible without the presence of the helping hands of others. May we always be in favor of sharing knowledge to those who lack, not abusing them for what they are not. Much like the insects who needs nectars from flowers in order to survive, but in return they support cross-pollination to produce more beauty in our surroundings.

That being said, those less educated will be able to learn and master concepts and principles in different fields of understanding to let them have a chance to express themselves to be of value and worth to the progress of society and to our nation. We must remember that what we are and what we do can ultimately have an effect to the world.

References: