It was tough. Those last four months of our lives was so challenging that we need or must I say it is a must that we survive. Factories being shut down, streets were free of traffic, grocery stores were full of people falling in line to get their necessities. Countries all over the globe was being shut down one by one. What to feel? Anxiety become a common attack to people who are weak when it comes to mental health. Services of our government being stopped for a while. Locked down, modified locked down. Whatever it may be called, it is still not normal.

Department of Education is one of the government agencies that is greatly affected by this pandemic. They suspended classes, canceled different school activities, etc. Covid 19 greatly affects this sector of the government. As we all know, DepEd caters students, and one of the decisions they made is to suspend June’s starting of classes and moved it to August 24.

It would be a challenging year for our DepEd officials as well as it’s teachers, students and parents on how we all gonna make this school year work. Solutions arising from this pandemic is learning through the use of technology. It was a great idea indeed. But wait, how about those who doesn’t have the means to buy gadgets as a tool for study? Another idea came out, through modules. Where students would be given modules to study in their home through the guidance of their parents. It was then a tough one because some parents didn’t have time to guide their children through that kind of method, but whatever it takes, DepEd assures us that education must never stop. And we as educators were highly motivated by this act of our leader.
Whatever this school year may bring to us as educators, though it would be tough, together we can make education a continuous process. Amidst this pandemic we will rise. As we all know that challenges are given to us not to bring us down, but to rise and be victorious of this virus. By the grace of our Almighty God, we will all came out strong and hopefully produced graduates this school year 2021.
