EDUCATION SHOULD NOT STOP AMIDST COVID-19 PANDEMIC

by:
Camille M. Punzalan

Education is always perceived as the key to a successful nation. This must be true since the government initiated the new normal classes through various distance learning modalities.

In the heights of pandemic, where the schools were closed not just in the country but in the whole world, Philippines introduces learning via modular, radio-based, tv based, online, and blended method. Learning should really continue and so the Department of Education pushes through the school opening though it was moved twice. These distance learning modalities are the responses of the Duterte administration to show support in the continuity of education without forsaking the health of the students.

Among these learning modalities, modular distance learning (MDL) was the widely preferred mode by the learners last school year 2020-2021 up to this current school year 2021-2022. It cannot be denied that modules have been very controversial for several issues including wrong grammatical content, inappropriate languages, and their appearances as well. However, this mode still proves itself to be the most chosen and the most workable.

In this continuing battle with the COVID-19, let us still be resilient and show our solid support for the educational ambition of the government. It is difficult for real but things get easy when we unite for it. As the health crisis does not stop, learning as well should not be stopped.

References: