Classroom management refers to the strategy by which teachers make sure that learning in the classrooms is not interrupted or disturbed by the learners themselves. The teacher often utilizes a set of methods, and techniques which ensure that lessons are not disrupted by students’ activities or behavior.

The objective of effective classroom management techniques is to achieve smooth running of all lessons as planned by the teacher. Basically, all teachers may confess that classroom management is a challenging task. Teachers have to adopt strategies to ensure the proper physical arrangement of the classroom and motivating students to participate in classroom activities.

If the classroom management is effective, the teacher is able to maximize his time in delivering the lesson efficiently, thus carrying out the objectives of the day. Similarly, students also spend much of their time learning new things and they will be able to grasp the main concept of the day’s lesson.

A number of strategies have been innovated to help teachers in the effective management of the classroom. Some of these strategies include paying more attention to misbehaving students. Teachers have to monitor and control their behaviors and activities in the classroom. Regulating the behavior of troublesome students is a part of this technique. In doing these, however, educators have to ensure that they do not interfere with the concentration of other attentive students.

Teachers may opt to adopt simple techniques, like, imposing seat plan and group activities. Students who are misbehaving will be seated away from each other. On the other hand, the teacher may group students and organize each group. Each group will have to choose their leader and the leader will help the teacher in facilitating the concept of the lesson. However, if there are no changes, then disciplinary measures such as punishments may be imposed.
