EMERGING ROLES OF SCHOOL IN THE ATTAINMENT OF QUALITY OF LIFE AMONG THE CITIZENRY

by:
Lady Airish D. Nicdao
Master Teacher I, Casupanan Elementary School

Education is the source of knowledge, skills and capacities that gives light to the life of each individual. This helps to create awareness by removing misconceptions and to attain quality life. Educated people have the higher chances to enjoy quality life better than an uneducated person. Educated people also have opportunities to get jobs that will help them maintain the standard of living.

Moreover, education is very important among the people of the community, a fact that is not commonly denied by anyone. It is education that transforms a person into a better life and, more importantly, into social well-being. It educates all the people of the community with all the attributes needed to lead a proper way of life. It also has a remarkable effect on one's personality. Getting educated and getting a professional degree prepare everyone to be part of and contribute to good organizations, companies, and other institutions. Education is the one that gives people the impetus to move forward and to do something constructive in the near future. With these, we can say that education plays a vital role in the personal growth and social development of all concerned. It gives the people of the community all the power and the necessities to make a noticeable mark in any field.

There are three major intersections between education, family, income, and productivity. These intersections are, in fact, a means of discovering the roles of education, particularly school, in the sustainability of quality of life in the present and in the attainment of quality of life in the future.
Education and Family. The relationship between education and basic family needs is one of the strongest and most convenient in family life education. A family with a quality of life usually places a high priority on the education of children. Intelligent and educated people in higher education can overcome their problems accordingly. Schooling will provide later access to higher education and provide a person with knowledge that will enable him/her to support his/her family. The educated and qualified family member also has the opportunity to work, without any difficulty.

Education and Income. Educated people are skilled individuals. They have more access to income generation than uneducated people do. Increased family income, therefore, deals with the scenario that they can move towards a quality of life. Family conflicts due to misunderstandings are less likely to occur in such families. Here, education helps to create a harmonious family environment and to achieve the quality of life. Moreover, education is one of the key elements of quality of life, and parents should provide their children with quality education. It helps to make use of modern materials and interventions to maintain the quality of life of family members.

Education and Productivity. Clearly, a well-educated workforce will surely lead to a progressive country. The same goes for a family with well-educated members. If they are degree holders, their chances of being a productive member of their community will be higher. Education improves one’s productivity.

Education, in every sense, is really one of the vital factors for development, and no country can accomplish economic and social development without education.

References:

https://core.ac.uk/

https://www.researchgate.net/

https://www.slideshare.net/