School institutions are considered as the second home for students. It is a place for them to be able to gain knowledge, hone their skills and apply them in a practical setting. Since it is supposed to be a home, maintaining a relaxed environment for students is essential in order for them to have extensive comprehension of lessons being taught, at the same time, lessening their stress from all the academic pressure.

A good classroom setting brings out better performance for both the teacher and the students. It is a spontaneous cycle that needs cooperation of the people involved. Izadinia (2013) highlighted that teachers are to discover their personal strengths as educators in order to be effective for the students they are teaching.

By doing so, they will be able to construct an effective teaching manner by shaping their own professional identity that will help students a lot in a manner that will not intimidate them but will make them feel cozy whenever they are reprimanded for wrongdoings.

For students, a conducive classroom helps by bringing out their best capabilities. They will be able to use the available resources they have with ease. Students will also be more confident in answering questions and will be able to participate freely in a relaxed classroom.

Responsibility and awareness are easier to teach in this type of conducive area for learning. This is because of the collective discursive efforts that will be developed with the teacher-student dynamic where the educator serves as a tool for widening the students’ moral understanding by using an approach that will foster the child’s sensibility and communication without making them feel inferior.

In the study of Fitzmaurice in 2015, she stated that students are being more diverse as time passes by because more are having access to education, which is a great thing. By that, having a faculty that has unending support helps a lot in serving the students whenever there are behavioral outbursts in class or whenever mental health issues are being raised.

Having the qualities that will help students feel more comfortable will help in pointing out the difference of each student as well as effectively making them listen and learn with what the teacher has to say. By having a relaxed classroom atmosphere, students and teachers alike are going to benefit by expertly sharing information with one another.
