GOSSIP GIRLS

by:

Judith Obejas
Teacher I, Mariveles National High School - Cababen

It is a communal stigma that educators love gossiping. We love chitchatting; we love expressing stories about how our class adjourns; who are our most much-loved and least desired students; the parents who blubbered for their youngsters’ mischief; our ceaseless loans; and our existence in wide-ranging.

But I independently have faith in that gossiping is not bad at all circumstances. For my circle, it is essentially our mode to express our motivation and vexation among co-teachers. Our contemporaries serve as sponges that captivate all of our stories. They function as our cake to vivify our wicked day. They are our pillows who extend their hands for a genuine embrace. Nevertheless, gossiping among educational practitioners procures obnoxious distinctiveness in our profession.

Fast (2017) accorded that when teacher gossip develops a noxious occurrence in a school, elation and ingenuity are muffled. Misgiving and cynicism become the novel custom. School ethos can be tumbledown by gossip. Most of often than not, gossip is the aftermath of folks not having sufficient data. When they don’t sense nonviolence or recognize the decorum for attaining exact information, they crack somewhere else. They endeavour to seal in the fissures by inquiring around and sharing what they contemplate they discern.

Am I affronted? Unquestionably not. In my case, educational practitioners gossip not to rescind affiliation but to build harmonious camaraderie. After all it is not wicked provided that it is done after class periods and just within your cliques who aspires no detriment among others.
References: