GREAT LEADER, GREAT TEACHER

by:
Aurea L. Sinson
Teacher I, Sta. Rosa Elementary School

As Dr. John Maxwell says, “everything rises and falls on leadership”, tell us how an educator can build or ruin the future of our learners through their leadership ability. In fact, a teacher who has the ability to influence his/her learner’s exhibits outstanding headship which is a good indication that the students are heading the pavement for success. However, if students are mishandled by a teacher who does not think about their welfare, they are more likely to fail in their way. Thus, teachers’ leadership is one of the keys in helping our young learners to reach the pinnacle realization of their life.

According to Concordia University (2013), there are school leadership qualities that every teacher must possess such as commitment in teaching in which the teachers will provide the best possible opportunities for the students to grasp learning; passionate in teaching and learning that will help the teachers to practice their craft effectively and to improve their teaching techniques; communication and rapport of the teachers to listen to the ideas and opinions of the students and other school stakeholders; and collaboration to fellow educators to create a quality environment for teaching and learning. These qualities will mold the teachers to become great leaders in the eyes of the learners as they lead them to face the real challenges of life. Henceforth, a teacher with a heart to lead the change to their students will remain to be very significant in producing educated individuals who are dedicated and determined to achieve their goals. Let us salute those educators who teach and lead with a purpose.

References:

https://www.amazon.com
https://educationaltechnologyguy.blogs