Guidance and counseling as a whole plays a major role in directing the students in their ways not only in school but also in the community where they live. Let us take a look of the things that guidance and counseling touches and deals within the school regarding the students.

Listening is the foremost thing that a guidance and counselor does when a student is being given attention in the guidance office. Accommodating the student with warmth and acceptance is a good practice. Let the student open up.

The guidance counselor should immediately perceive the situation where the student is involved. This should be handled with tact and tolerance for a student may feel comfortable if he or she is kindly accepted in the guidance office. Make the student feel at home.

It is very important to analyze the problem. Careful handling and deliberation of the problem must be realized. Try to determine the two sides of the coin so as to be fair to everyone. Clarify things.

Tracing the root cause is another step to do. It is significant to find out the reason behind the problem so as to determine how to find the solution. Knowing the cause would yield the things to do. Be diplomatic.

The counseling process is very caring for this is where the advice and suggestions are being given to the student. It is the heart of the procedure that touches the feeling or emotion of the student. Emphasize the major points for better changes.
For better understanding, it is recommended to expound the advice to the students. This is to cite the advantages and effects of the suggestions to people and situations. Explain very well the future outcomes.

Monitoring the child’s adjustment is also essential. Through the cooperation of teachers, the changes in the student’s attitude, behavior and academic performance may be easily determined. Be sure that the student follows the agreement.

The guidance counselor may extend work beyond the office by determining the student’s academic progress. This is just reassuring the student was able to adjust and was able to cope with the situation. Check if the student is in good condition.

Guidance and counseling on task contributes meaningfully in maintaining a child-friendly school. A school has a guidance and counseling department that guides, counsels and cares for the learners.
