Primarily, a school should be the model of harmony in the community. Since the stakeholders regard the school as the center of learning, it is the school that models harmony in the community.

How do we perceive harmony in the school? This astonishing question may be answered by tangible and concrete answers.

Harmony in the school is best represented by its leader. The school administrator is a picture of goodwill and camaraderie. This type of leader favors peace and serenity within the organization.

The teachers also exude harmony. They extremely execute respect to their superior and are well-mannered in dealing with their colleagues. They also treat the students with love and care and they regard parents with utmost reverence.

The learners also contribute in the attainment of harmony in the school. They are expected to show appropriate respect to the school authorities. They also obediently follow their teachers and treat everyone equally regardless of gender, ethnicity, religion or socio-economic status.

The school also has external stakeholders who play important roles in the school. The parents in particular are vital in the success of the institution. The school should be in harmony with them. Harmonious relationship with parents are best seen when the parents are seen when parents assist the school in meeting school programs and projects.
Harmony is evident in the school if there is no conflict. The people constituting the school community are at peace with each other and are harmoniously helping each other in attaining the success of the school and also dealing with them with great tolerance.

A school that has harmony welcomes everyone with a great smile and treats everyone with great respect. The people within the school are working happily and are ardently contributing to the welfare of the school.

The school that has harmony is child-friendly and this kind of institution contributes to the betterment of the learners… their development and growth.

Harmony in the school is indeed necessary and this can be achieved through respect, love, care and being good in words and in action. If there is harmony in the school, the people within it would be happy. As Mahatma Gandhi once espoused, “Happiness is when what you think, what you say, and what you do are in harmony.”
