HEART

by:
Christine Joy E. Sanchez
Teacher II

But the eyes are blind. One must look with the heart” said the little Prince.

It’s true that sometime we teachers failed to see what our students truly need and feel. We sometimes rely on what we see and neglect what we truly feels. We overlook the efforts of our students just because what we see is not their efforts and intentions, but the lack of knowledge that we want to see in them.

We, who were their pillar of hope, sometimes push then to be alone. We, not all the time, let them down and become someone they can’t reach for. We, who give them support, sometimes take that support away in their most vulnerable circumstance.

In this kind of situation, we need to close our eyes and start opening our hearts, extend our hands and lift them up. We are their ladder in reaching their destiny, don’t let our students’ gets stuck in the dark because we, instead of becoming their ladder, we became weights that pulls them down.

We who they put their trust in to reaching their goal should prove that they made the right decision. Let’s open our hearts wider than our eyes and guide them with our soft but brave heart.

Let’s all become proud when we see them all succeed in life and say “I am part of who they become because I didn’t let them down”

References:

Book.antoinedesaint_exupery