Noisy means making a lot or unpleasant noise. In reality, there is a noisy class in learning institutions. The question is, how do teachers manage noisy a class? For new teachers, it is a big issue to manage the noisy class, no matter what they tried to control them.

Here are ways to manage a noisy class:

First, put out the fuse. Do not wait for the explosion. Pay attention to who is talking, where noise is coming, then call their attention when they starting doing something that can cause noise.

Next, make it individuals, not the group. It is better to call an individual rather than group when your calling their attention. If you call them as a group others might not listen to you. Identify students who are driving the disturbance.

Third, learn the power of whisper. When teacher raise her voice while in class pupils tends to speak louder. Whispering to the class can be one of the most effective methods for getting your pupils focus. When you whisper students will listen very well so they can hear you.

Fourth, showing students that while you are firm, you are also fair. Show your willingness to be in charge by classroom, being consistent in your treatment of students, and by establishing clear boundaries and expectations. If you do, the next time students get noisy, a simple and gentle “hello” will restore focus and attention immediately.

The fifth one is always remember, make it about the actions, not the students help pupils to understand, instead of showing disappointment, instead of saying ‘what is wrong with you, say ‘I’m upset that you’ve done this, show that you’re disappointed rather than angry.

Therefore, teacher should not start the lesson to a noisy class, because pupils will never be interested to the lesson as well as to the teacher.
