HIGH HOPES

by:

Jeric C. Lopez
Teacher III, SDO Orion Annex

Based from The World Bank, there are range of challenges in striving to implement the ALS, which responds to out-of-school youth and adults who have various motivations for learning and face diverse geographical and socioeconomic conditions. Statistics show that about 3.7 million youth aged 16-24 and 3.1 million young adults aged 25-30 did not complete junior high school and are out of school, which is about 23% of those aged 15 to 301.

Out of school adults are generally more practical, less open-minded and receptive to change. Because of these traits, making them learn something is a challenging thing to do. Alternative Learning System (ALS) aims to reach out anyone who is still willing to pursue their dreams and be a productive citizen of our country. For them having a diploma fulfill their personality, they readily give their extra time and effort despite of different schedules in their everyday living.

Most of the adults have their regrets in the past generation but when they knew about Alternative Learning System (ALS) and how it can help them achieve their delayed dreams. This became an avenue for them to continue their unfinished business and earn the paper that will lead them to success. Thus, the Alternative Learning System (ALS) provides an instruction that is parallel with their needs.

A glimpse of success in every adult learner can definitely satisfy the hearts of their teachers. It will bring selfless hope to others and enlighten the minds of people that there is no dead end in education. Age will never be an issue in pursuing one’s dreams, hope can be found everywhere and build it high in Alternative Learning System.

References:

https://business.inquirer.net/281269/ph-poverty-rate-seen-falling-below-20-starting-2020
https://www.adb.org/countries/philippines/poverty https://www.pressreader.com/philippines/sunstar-pampanga/20140502/281659663049834