HOME-CENTERED EDUCATION
Written by: Fetadel A Tria

In this increasingly complex world education is one of the most important acquisitions of life to educate student’s mind and to develop skills and talents, and the power to act well in your capacity to appreciate life. In knowledge, there is power. No one would ever stop learning at all things, at all times and in all places. With great desire and anxiety for the welfare of considering education amidst of pandemic, why need not to skip?

We often heard and very familiar about a teacher-mother set up in school, why not discuss about a mother-teacher at home? Since Department of Education allowed the homeschooling “because there are parents who believe that the mother, or the father can be more effective as a teacher perhaps the formal school system”.

Parental teaching is like being an on-call physician. We always need to be ready to teach our children because we never know when the opportunity will present itself. In addition, parent is the most important people in child’s life. You are also their first teacher and responsible for laying a foundation that enables them to benefit from their early school years.

Regardless of our circumstances, you can make your home the center of school learning. It simply means taking personal responsibility for your child’s development. This is a small change, but it can make a big impact on the nourishment of the students. As a matter of fact, it is a good idea to learn together and to learn with them. Ensuring that education begins at home increases the likelihood that it will generalize to the school setting and beyond.

Department of Education Sec. Briones once said, despite of this pandemic, “we need to face this fears around”.

“If you are prepared, you shall not fear”.

References:
https://www.researchgate.net/publication
https://childdevelopmentinfo.com/learning/education-begins-at-home