It is normal for a child to start showing some thoughts through tantrums, disobeying your commands, and so on. Discipline is harder for an older pupil.

Remember that whatever you choose to discipline your pupil, you should always do it with love. Discipline does not force your pupil to act in a certain way, but about the best desire for your child. After disciplining your pupil, always make sure you love him. One way is to offer a hug.

Children tend to act badly if parents are unperturbed and unreasonable, rather than understand and meet their needs. Your child is young and has never learned how to deal with feelings like boredom, hunger, and exhaustion. Sometimes we need to be patient.

Some parents are extremely vulnerable to their child's ability to tolerate their bad behavior. However, your pupil needs more boundaries by not responding to his bad habits, because as it continues it becomes more difficult to change.

It is important to keep in mind that no matter what your child, he is still not a "naughty" child. You should stop when you find yourself calling your child “naughty” instead, explain that what he behaves and what he does are wrong.

Try other discipline strategies without hitting pupil. Never do it with anger. Talk to him with harmoniously as mother to a child, and a teacher to a pupil relationship.
Consider how age is affecting the pupil's behavior. "It is important to overcome the way discipline and conversation with the pupil so that he can still guide the change that is happening in his life and keep the limitation as a teacher and as a pupil. Develop the pupil's talent. Whatever his passion encourage the pupil to discover his talents that make him happy. By doing so, in his evolution he can bring the guts and senses we feel.
