HOW TO EDUCATE CHILDREN

by:
Decelyn G. Vea
Master Teacher I New San Jose ES New San Jose, Din., Bataan

Parents are the child’s first and most vital teacher in their life. At home, the parents teach their children how to speak, how to walk properly, holding things and there are many more that a parent can educate their children. The first utterance of words coming from the child, is taught by the parents, particularly the mother. From that, we can refer that mothers are the best teacher among the teachers in the whole world. She teaches the values, morals and respectably good manners that will be acquired by the children as they grow, and that it can help shape the personality, also the character, of a child and will be applied even if the child has grown up. They say that when the background and environment of the family is good, children coming from this kind of family has a very good conduct and have a perfectly developed values and virtues. As soon as the child enrolls in a school, he/she already possesses different attitudes and behavior by the guidance of their parents. The child is more likely to have full of energy because in school, he/she will learn a variety of information, ideas, and knowledge. A school is designed to provide learning among the children under the direction and supervision of a teacher. It also helps the children to become a morally upright and respectable citizen of the country, having been guided by a teacher. A teacher has a great factor and influence in the development of the child. The teachers are responsible for preparing the child in becoming a grown-up adult, that will someday become a part of the society. Here are different ways to educate children:

• Develop a relationship with your child’s teacher and the school staff.
• Support your children academically and emotionally.
• Get involved in your child’s school affairs.
• Be informed and advocate for your child.
• Support and help your child’s learning at home.
• Become a friend to your child.

References: