Is there a way to secure a teaching position in a public school in the Philippines? Well, good news! Because there is! Below are the points that an applicant like you must duly keep in mind.

➢ Most important of all is the board rating. A competitive board exam result can already be a good foundation of a positive application.
➢ Take the EPT seriously since this plays a big part of your overall score. Allot some time to review advanced English grammar rules.
➢ If you have teaching experience, that’s a plus for you.
➢ Any training certificates that should be related to your major. This will give you a guaranteed ten (10) point score.
➢ Ten articles about education or your major. Like a training certificate, this is equivalent to 10 points as well.
➢ Academic awards like Latin honors are a major twist in your overall score.
➢ A successful demonstration teaching will be a good ace as well. This will make the panel to root for you.
➢ Remember to stay composed during the interview and avoid stammering. The interviewer might give you a perfect score if you exude your ideas clearly and confidently.

Now, if you’re starting to lose courage because of what you have read above, there’s a way for you to totally secure a teaching position in a public school. That is, be a DOST (Department of Science and Technology) scholar in your university. Certainly, after you pass the BLEPT (Board Licensure Examination for Professional Teachers), you will be deployed in a public school by January of the next year. That’s right. While the other applicants are just preparing their requirements, you are already employed in a public school. However, note that you will still have to prepare the needed documents since you are considered as an applicant as well.

Securing a teaching position in a public school requires qualifications that an applicant must meet, DOST scholar or not. It is a thoughtful process that every applicant will go through. After all, DEPED has to make sure that only qualified teachers are in the industry.
