Working in one place especially with your administrator makes easy if you are doing comfortable and without hesitation with each other. Nevertheless, how can we work comfortable and effective to make our administrator felicitous?

According to Joel Wagner, that no matter how hard you try and no matter how much the students and parents love you; certain people remain who can make your job more difficult. Principals, superintendents, counselors, and secretaries are key people to have on your side”. However, how do you get them on your team? He talked about this at great length in a previous post. However, they will look in-depth at some tactics that he has found to be fruitful.

1. Less Promise, Over Deliver

There is a saying that “Promises are made to be broken.” This fact makes immediately lowers the judgement or sentiments of people hold about you. Nevertheless, we must always remember that if you commit promises especially to your superior see to it that you can make it. Whatever action you have said that you are going to do; the very lowest limit that you must do is exactly what you said. Your intention to meet expectations when you tell someone what you will do and to exceed those expectations when you actually do it. Perhaps it is a competitive thing for you, but you want to be better than everyone else is. Always be certain to do what you say you will do.

2. Deliver your students in a positive light

It is not good to hear that you are always complaining about the children you are teaching. The more love hearing you that brag about the children you get to teach. Gossip and complaining will merely turn into a downward spiral. If you are the best in the world, then your students must be the greatest students ever. Choose your attitude; always have a positive outlook on everything you do and everything that happened.

3. Propose Solutions
Everybody can point out problems. Most people do. Those who change the world offer solutions instead of merely pointing out problems. Problems with no offered solution lead to complaining. Complaining makes people to offend you more; it is just making someone to be negative and unenthusiastic. People who complain generally do not get the help with budget items. Sometimes, they are not even in control of that. Complaining to someone about something they cannot fix is definitely not going to give them a higher view of you. Always remember the sayings “Obey first before you complain” and “if you want to be a good leader, you must be a good follower”.

4. Smile when you talk with them
This works for everyone. It gives the impression that you love your job and that you love your students. People who love their jobs are more productive at work. When you are talking about those solutions, be sure that you laugh about the problem rather than getting upset about it. As mentioned before, it is not always their fault. Administrators especially the principals observe us not to criticize but to strengthen our weaknesses.
