The greatest sign of success for a teacher is to be able to say, “The children are now working as if I did not exist.” – Maria Montessori.

This line is congruent with the classroom management that teachers are aiming to achieve in the school. In order to make an ideal classroom management be realized, teachers must consider significant key elements which are contributory in attaining a safe and efficient learning environment.

Classroom design which is the first element in attaining an ideal classroom management may refer to the proper positioning of the students’ desks, the teacher’s table and other learning facilities inside the classroom. By means of proper classroom design, everything will fall into its proper place and order. It is convenient to move in a place which is attractive and organized.

Setting rules is another element to consider since this may create a classroom that is filled with respect and care. Rules may guide the schoolchildren in acting desirably and doing what is right and good. If there are do’s and don’ts to consider, the learners will be sensitive and be concerned to others. They will be made aware of the things to be done in the class.

Implementing proper discipline is helpful in managing the class as long as the teacher is firm, fair and consistent. If students know how to follow and pay respect to others, there will be no problem in the class. Discipline is very important in achieving a well-managed class.

Right scheduling is essential in the class for it assures the time to be spent in the class and sets the time on task. Thus, the learners will be able to have time management of the things they to do in school whether in the actual work or during break time as given by the teacher.

Organization may pertain to the proper arrangement and order of the files, the portfolios, the books, the working materials and other learning devices of the students. They should also know where to get and return these materials.

Instructional techniques should be tailored well by the teacher. The teacher must be able to utilize the most appropriate technique in instructing the learners to the point that they are manageable and controllable. In this way, the students are learning at the same time enjoying.
Communication is another key element that is contributory in attaining an ideal classroom management. The teacher must give the child the opportunity to converse with him or her, share his or her thoughts, feelings and sentiments. In this way, the student would feel respected and will not misbehave in the classroom.

By having these key elements, the teacher will find it easy to manage the students and the learners will cooperate well in classroom discussions and in various activities.

Ideal classroom management would be best achieved if these key elements are followed.
