INTEGRATING SOCIAL STUDIES AND ART SUBJECT

by:
Alma C. Bato
Teacher III, Pantalan Luma Elementary School

How many in your class enjoys social studies? How about Arts?

When compared to mathematics and language, Social studies and Arts maintain to be two subjects that are not handed as much teaching period in the classroom. Burstein & Knotts (2011)

Social studies is well-defined as, “the cohesive analysis of the social sciences in addition to civilizations to encourage civic proficiency. On the other hand, visual and/or performing arts are a manner that folks and groups can communicate their ethnic customs as well as practices. It is a way to exemplify art, music, and literature and for humans to vent their culture over and done with sensory involvements such as dance, music, literature, visual media coupled with theatre.

By integrating art into the study of social sciences, teachers may perhaps be capable to discover appropriate time in the day to assimilate the two topics that combine collectively. Brewer & Brown (2009)

Furthermore, by means of integrating arts into a prospectus can blend art ideas with further academic subjects into corresponding sequences. Thus, while there are signs of a thin door for teachers who are eager to test the triviality of students and the demand for creativity in a more imaginative curriculum, using integration technique could possibly be a tool to extend the door in the day to day instructions.
References:
