Learning styles of students vary. Again, individual differences is true. What is learning style by the way? It is the way in which learners recognize, commence to focus on undertaking and keep new and strenuous information. How to teach students on how to learn, is the question for a creative teacher to answer. What is a creative teacher? A creative teacher creates a positive and lasting impact on the lives of students with individual preferences.

There are three kinds of learning styles (1) Work better alone, (2) Socializers – who perform best in company of other person and (3) responding to authority.

Because students have their own preferences, their need must be recognized and treated.

For those who work better alone perhaps the learner is easily distracted or shy. In the long run should learn how to work well with his or her classmates.

The reverse is true for the socializers who perform best in company of others. They have to be taught to study or work well even alone.

With patience and understanding, teachers and parents must teach their students to respect one another’s learning styles.

For those who respond to authority, they respond best to adults who do not come on too strong and do not lean on them too much.
