Teachers are anticipated to live up to the ideals of education to better serve the educational clientele and to be a true role model. The ideals or principles are enumerated:

Excellence. The teachers need to uphold excellence in the profession. Mediocrity has no place in education that is why teachers aim for excellence whether in teaching or other related activities.

Honesty. Being morally upright is required in the field of education. An honest teacher is someone who could be trusted by all the stakeholders in the school community.

Industry. The love for work is evident in a teacher. Teachers are known for hard work and doing what is ought to be done at the best.

Dependability. Teachers in the school should be dependable most especially in times of needs. Students may rely on teachers in times of difficulties while the superiors may count on the teachers if they services are necessitated.
Resourcefulness. Being resourceful may create better teaching-learning process. Through the resourcefulness of teachers instructions may be improved and augmented enormously.

Innovativeness. The teacher’s inventiveness is part of the teaching parlance in the present generation. Teachers should initiate novelty and breakthrough in teaching.

Excellence, honesty, industry, dependability and innovativeness are considered valuable in the teaching profession.

Through these ideals of education better results are produced hence better quality of instruction is expected.
