MANAGING AN ONLINE CLASSROOM

by:

MAYER D. NOGOT

The components of administering an online classroom differ from those of a traditional classroom. Whatever age group of pupils an online teacher teaches, there are a few things to keep in mind to manage their classroom and workload efficiently. Teachers are going past review and spiraling previously taught standards into new concepts to end the school year as most states close schools for the remainder of the year. Teachers must ensure that their digital classroom platform is well-managed for pupils to successfully master the remaining grade-level standards and be ready for next year (Foght, 2020).

Student involvement is at the root of many of the issues with online learning. When students learn online, they don't benefit from an instructor wandering about the room checking their engagement. Students undertake most online studying on their own, except video conferencing and other technical tools that some teachers have access to. Maintaining motivation is more difficult for pupils, and motivating students remotely is admittedly more difficult for teachers. Building healthy relationships between teachers and students is simply one aspect of the battle for an effective learning environment. Students' sense of community is just as vital in an online classroom as in a regular classroom. It's easy for a student to feel isolated when learning online. Include ways for kids to collaborate and even interact. Plagiarism is more likely to occur when students learn online. Students work on technology gadgets that provide limitless resources, and the temptation to copy material can be overwhelming. Every online teacher, in my opinion, should begin combating plagiarism right away. Explain what it is and give examples to the kids. Outline the ramifications of plagiarizing. Routines are essential in any learning setting, mainly when you cannot be physically there with your students.
It's a good idea to keep habits simple. For example, throughout the course, students should submit work and receive comments in the same manner. Establish and keep to office hours for students to reach you. Maintaining some regularity with the tasks assigned each week can also assist pupils in developing their home habits. Finally, it is critical to repeat your exercises frequently. Routines are essential in any learning setting, mainly when you cannot be physically there with your students daily.

References:
