MANIFESTING POSITIVE DISCIPLINE

by:
Arlene D. Balayo
Teacher I

The field of education requires positive discipline to modern learners. This entails a constructive way of disciplining the learners of the new generation. Since there are existing policies that are now protecting the children, it is a better way to demonstrate congruent humane way to manage them in the school...that is positive discipline.

Positive discipline technique may be attributed to the given ways below:

The teacher serves a guide. The teacher who realizes positive discipline acts a guide to the learner in terms of proper actions and behaviors inside and outside the school in order to become a well-disciplined individual.

The teacher acts as a second parent. This means that the teacher serves as a parent who only wants the best for the schoolchildren. As a second parent, the teacher assures that the child acquires good moral values, attitudes and behaviors.

The teacher manifests sensitivity to the feelings and conditions of the learners. The teacher should be cautious in dealing with the learners. It is expected that encouraging words of inspiration should come out from the teacher in order to protect the feelings or emotions of the learners. Moreover, express praises and recognitions for their good deeds.

The teacher empathizes with the learners. Putting oneself in another’s shoes is being practiced. It means that the teacher should feel what the learners feel and should extend wide understanding on their conditions.
The teacher shows compassion. Teachers are anticipated to show kindness and consideration with the students regarding their actions in the school. Showing compassion is a virtue that wins the heart of each learner.

The teacher suggests constructive remarks. Positive discipline is giving suggestions on the right, moral and rational things to do. It also means that kind words may soften the heart and may persuade someone to do good or even better.

The teacher provides love and care. Positive discipline is loving. Whenever you direct a person to proper direction, it means you show the person love and care.

Positive discipline is a new way of making learners feel that they are being directed and at the same time being loved. The teachers have to manage the learners in positive ways. As Morin (2019) wrote, “Before you jump to any conclusions, however, positive discipline may be an effective way to teach your children valuable life lessons.”

References: