NO BLAMING GAME

by:
Giniely V. Carreon
Teacher III, Mariveles National High School - Cabcaben

There is a war between parents and teachers. And it is all about who is the primary in charge of the student’s well-being.

School teachers especially the advisers are considered as second parents. We are the ones in command of their safety, learning and over-all well-being as they set their feet on the school’s premises. Not only to ten students, but more or less two hundred fifty learners that we handle every day.

As opined by Marimla (2017), learners are excited to acquire knowledge when their mentors motivate them. Our attitude and teaching methods all play a vital role in our student’s education. Their first teacher is their mother and their first school is their home. The best example of that is discipline. Millennial learners nowadays are naughty and hard headed. Students find it hard to listen and obey; perhaps they choose not to or too tired to do so. We must be reminded that the child’s etiquette at Junior High School is a reflection of their manner reception. On the other hand, student’s behavior at home might be of consequence of their experiences at school.

Teachers are designated to be a second parent, but parents must be the key player of their child’s success. Student’s well-being is a joint responsibility of both parents and teachers. To end this, I sincerely say that we, teachers, always hope for the best and only the best for our dear students.
References:

https://www.pressreader.com/