ON THE VERGE OF MY PROFESSION

“Teaching is the noblest profession”, the line which influenced my choice of profession, teaching. I believe that teaching will give me full satisfaction and will boost my morale without realizing the struggles and sacrifice I would face in fulfilling my duties as an educator. Each batch is different from classification and style, from academic performance and excellence. What bothers me is the line that says it is always been a teachers’ factor that affects the outcome of students’ performance every end of each academic year. The success or failure of the students reflects how the teachers handled them. This is the bitter truth of this profession, the truth that pierced our hearts. Am I on the verge of my profession? Is there a need to stop and look for a new profession? In one hand I realized that I need to enhance my skills and grow professionally through studying and attending trainings. I consider this as a new challenge not only for me but for my fellow teachers as well. On the other hand, it makes me upset. I do not want to give my reasons why but I must say that teaching is not an easy task; it needs perseverance and a lot of patience to be called as an educator.
