ONCE A CHILD

“All grown-ups were once children, but only few of them remember” it, a line from the famous book of Antoine de Saint-Exupery, “The Little Prince”.

Just like the line from the book, all of us were once children and we all experienced different things. Most of them were made in the school when we were in kindergarten, elementary and high school.

Remember when we used to play more than half of the time we have for studying? When we used to laugh out loud and giggle? We were just happy about life, about being at school and be with our friends. Life was easier back then. It’s not a problem if we failed as long as we know how to stand back up again and continue to move forward.

But being young is not a permanent thing. We grow up, we faced hardships and difficulties. We encounter issues that almost impossible to overcome. And because of all this we slowly forgot the child inside of us that was once happy and bright.

Some of us failed to remember that we should enjoy life and face each difficulty with a smile, with a brave heart and with a mindset that no trouble is worth giving up.
