ONE STEP AT A TIME

There is always a sad part in every story. In our life, it is not always a free ride to say. Everyone has a weight to carry on his shoulder. It is just how someone will be going to do his way out to succeed. People tend to find an escape route always in order to get through with the hardships. And it is not poverty that will pull them down to grave as always.

They struggle, yes, it is true. They even crawl to death or pull strings up just to get a better education. You will hear a lot of sad stories from different people. But all of them mostly ended up successful. That is how people value education. Young ones give time for work. Divide their days and nights into living and studying. They get tired but never lose hope of claiming their diplomas one day. Parents work hard every day. They even work until late hours of the night. They somehow get exhausted but never thought of stopping until their children are degree holders. This is how people look up for education. They could be in some worst situations just to comply with the school obligations. They, at times, missed to have a decent meal on their table but they never care even in a bit. They ignore how they dress their selves even if it is ugly. They ignore the cold stares of other people. They close their eyes in smirks of others.

Every sacrifice they put will be paid off once the commencement ceremony is held. Every pain is worth to be healed by the claps of the audience. Every struggle is worth to be honored as the light continue to brighten the night. It is a long process full of scuffle. It is indeed a battle. But taking one step at a time, every suffering has its end. No matter how low your life could be, never take education as a burden. It will bring you a decent life once you take it as a priority in life.
