ONE WAY OF HELPING STUDENTS CONTINUE SCHOOLING

by:
Emy G. Lazatin
Teacher I, JC Payumo MHS

As a public teacher, we are responsible in each of our students, particularly the education that they need to attain. It is our role to visit the students if the students are unable to attend school. There are so some factors affecting the attendance of the students these are social and emotional problems due to home environment. The student life outside the school is a contributing factor that influenced the students in performing well in school. These factors include family violence, poverty, parental substance abuse, or environmental risk factor, such as unsafe community. In such case, the role of the teacher is to go into the homes of students in order to affect cooperation between the school and family. The teacher and the parents will talk on how to help the student to continue his or her studies. In a form of agreement, the parents and the students together with the teacher will monitor the students. This is one way to help the students to go to school and continue to study. Responding quickly to work in partnership with students and families is the most effective way to manage non-attendance so that the pattern does not well established. Home visitation creates a deeper connection to the family and students, allowing the teacher to better teach the students. Home visits build relationship, skills, and engagement for families, educators and students from kindergarten to 12th grade. Home visitation is an intervention to those students with a risk of failing, with home visit the teacher will have an idea what affect the students in performing well in school, by this process the teacher will provide materials for the students to continue his or her study. Remote areas are not a hinder to visit the students, by coming to them shows that we care and we want them to continue their studies.
References:
http://www.dictionary.com/browse/visiting-teacher