ONLINE TEACHING

by:
Marielle C. Victoria

Modern Day Educators Teaching is a unique and honorable profession that requires one to invest the heart, soul, and mind into it. It is about nurturing and developing minds and talents. It's about devoting time to every student. It's about inspiring young minds to play with ideas, think deeply about the subject matter, take on more challenging work, and even pursue careers in a particular field of study to become successful in life.

The pandemic resulted to drastic shift to remote teaching and learning. However, we soon discovered that the school closures would be indefinite as the country dealt with the worst global public health crisis of our lifetimes, along with terrible economic consequences. It has an impact on teachers, students and parents everywhere. In these extraordinary times with digital and technology advancements, it can help make distance learning easier and more accessible. This method of educating people via internet is known as online teaching. One-on-one or group video chats and webinars are some of the options. You must be familiar with the internet and use of computers in order to teach online. Students will be communicating via messaging apps, video calls and emails. Many professors must also generate digital resources for their students such as pdf guides, presentations, videos, and audio lectures. The best part is that it is available to a large number of people and students have more freedom to delegate their time to other non-academic activities and projects since they do not always stick to a fixed schedule.

Through the continued coordination and combined teamwork of parents, teachers and students, educators continue to do their job to the best of their abilities. As we’ve witnessed multiple times when teachers go above and beyond the call of duty, we've recognized that teaching is more than just these day-to-day duties.

References:

https://www.ccaurora.edu/programs-classes/online-learning/benefits-online-education